Description

The Chocolate Hills is a natural monument in Bohol, and is recognized as the 3rd National Geological Monument in the Philippines. They are a geological formation that are believed to be mounds of limestone left over from centuries ago. It is also one of the main tourist attractions in the province, along with the Tarsier Conservation Area in Loboc. The hills are located in the municipality of Carmen. There are over 1,268 hills spread over an area of more than 50 square kilometres. During the rainy season, the hills are covered with lush green vegetation, from top to bottom while during the summer, the hills turn brown or “chocolate-coloured”, hence it was named the ‘Chocolate Hills’.

The hills are uniformly cone-shaped, like Hershey’s Kisses, and are 30 to 50 metres high. Some people would describe them as molehills in the mountain, while some locals would say that the hills remind them of a woman’s breasts.

In October 15, 2013, the Chocolate Hills Complex was one of the establishments affected by the massive earthquake that hit Bohol and other neighboring provinces in the Visayas Region. The observation deck partially collapsed and the complex was closed for a few days. Today, the facilities in the complex are all fully functional.
